VOLUME III.

DEWITT CLINTON, GOVERNOR. 1817.

DeWitt Clinton, fifth Governor of New York, the son of the distinguished revolutionary general, James Clinton, and nephew of the first Governor of New York, was born at the family homestead, Little Britain, March 2, 1769; entered Columbia College with the distinction of the first student admitted under the reorganization of the college by the Regents of the University in 1784; graduated 1786 at the head of his class and studied law in the office of Samuel Jones of New York, subsequently State Comptroller; acted as private secretary to Governor George Clinton 1789–1795; elected Member of Assembly 1797; Senator 1798–1802; Member of the Council of Appointment 1801; delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1801 from Queens county, where he took an advanced position in favor of the Council of Appointment exercising equal rights with the Governor in making appointments; elected to the United States Senate February 4, 1802, as the successor of General John Armstrong, and resigned his seat in the summer of 1803, in order to accept the less conspicuous but more lucrative position of Mayor of New York, to which he had been appointed by the Council of Appointment; Mayor of New York by successive annual appointment until 1807, when he was removed by the Council; elected to the Senate, however, in 1805; he was successively returned until 1811, when he was elected Lieutenant Governor; he had been in the meantime restored to the Mayoralty of New York by his friends in the Council February 8, 1808, only to be removed February 13, 1810, 1817. July 1

by a Council inimical to his interests; reappointed again February 5, 1811, he continued in office as Mayor all through his term as Lieutenant Governor and until March 6, 1815, when he was finally removed by his political enemies; Regent of the University 1808–1825; 1810 appointed by joint resolution of the legislature on the commission to explore the entire route for inland navigation from the Hudson to Lakes Ontario and Erie; during his retirement devoted much of his time to this subject; submitted to the legislature February 21, 1816, a memorial which he had drafted and which was indorsed by many prominent and influential men in New York, favoring the construction of the Erie and Champlain canals; the legislature in spite of trifling opposition enacted a law appointing a commission of five to make preliminary surveys, estimates of expense and the practicability of creating loans on the credit of the State and Stephen Van Rensselaer, DeWitt Clinton, Samuel Young, Joseph Ellicott and Myron Holley were named as the commissioners; February, 1817, the reports were submitted to the legislature, and after weeks spent in debate and in April, 1817—the 10th in the Assembly, the 15th in the Senate—the legislature passed the act authorizing the construction of the Erie and Champlain canals; Governor 1817–1822 and 1824–1828; participated in the formal opening of the Erie canal at Buffalo October 26, 1825, and traveled on the pioneer boat, Seneca Chief, from Buffalo to Sandy Hook, where a keg of Lake Erie water was emptied into the Atlantic ocean, with appropriate remarks by the Governor; died at Albany, N. Y., February 11, 1828, aged fifty-nine years.

January 27, 1818, the regular session of the legislature began. In the assembly David Woods was reelected speaker. The members of the Council were selected four days later: Peter R. Livingston of Dutchess, Jabez D. Hammond of Otsego, Henry Yates, Jr., of Schenectady, and Henry Seymour of Onondaga—all Republicans. Two, Livingston and Seymour, were decidedly hostile to Governor Clinton, Hammond was friendly, and Yates resented the dictation and interference of Judge Spencer. The operations of this Council were peculiar and very much mixed; personal friendship and personal influence among the members themselves produced greater results than political considerations. Cadwallader D. Colden was appointed mayor of New York by a coalition between Messrs. Hammond and Yates, with the governor casting the deciding vote; not because the governor favored Colden, for Sylvanus Miller had been nominated by him, but in order to defeat the choice of Messrs. Livingston and Seymour, the Tammany or "Bucktail" member, so called from the custom of Tammany men wearing a buck's tail in their hat on certain occasions. The Council made many changes in the civil service, restored many of their party friends and disciplining obnoxious partisans.

Mr. Ogden Edwards of New York introduced a bill in the assembly at this session of the legislature, authorizing the calling of a state convention for the purpose of amending the state Constitution by abolishing the Council of Appointment, but Governor Clinton refused to lend his assistance to the scheme.

STATE OF NEW YORK—GENERAL ORDERS.

Headquarters, Albany, June 27, 1818.

The Commander-in-chief considering it necessary that a new arrangement of the militia should be made as nearly conformable to the most approved system and to the laws of the United States, as local circumstances and the public convenience will permit, has thought proper to establish the following general organization.

Independently of the divisions of cavalry and artillery, the militia shall be arranged into twenty-five divisions, in manner following, to wit:

The first division is to consist of the thirty-third and twenty-second brigades, and to be under the command of Major General John Floyd.

The second division—of the forty-fourth and forty-fifth brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Jonas Mapes.

The third division—of the third and tenth brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Gerard Steddiford.

The fourth division—of the fifteenth and twenty-ninth brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Pierre Van Cortland.

The fifth division—of the nineteenth and thirty-fourth brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Leonard Smith.

The sixth division—of the twenty-third and twenty-fifth brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Erastus Root.

The seventh division—of the twentieth and thirtieth brigades, and to be under the command of Major General James Tallmadge.

The eighth division—of the twelfth and thirty-seventh brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Peter J. Vosburgh.

The ninth division—of the eighth and thirty-first brigades, the commandant of which will be assigned in a future order.*

The tenth division—of the sixteenth and seventeenth brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Simon DeRider.

The eleventh division—of the fortieth and forty-second brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Benjamin Mooers.

The twelfth division—of the forty-ninth fourth and twenty-sixth brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Calvin Brittain.

The thirteenth division—of the thirteenth and twenty-first brigades, and to be under the command of Major General George Widrig.

The fourteenth division—of the eleventh and fourteenth brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Richard Dodge.

* Adam Yates, major general, March 27, 1819.

The fifteenth division—of the ninth and fifty-first brigades, and to be under the command of Major General John Dunning.

The sixteenth division—of the twenty-eighth and second brigades, and to be under the command of Major General James Stewart.

The seventeenth division—of the thirty-second and thirty-fifth brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Nathaniel King.

The eighteenth division—of the twenty-seventh and forty-eighth brigades, and to be under the command of Major General John Ellis.

The nineteenth division—of the thirty-sixth and forty-first brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Ansel Goodrich.

The twentieth division—of the fiftieth and eighteenth brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Matthew Carpenter.

The twenty-first division—of the seventh and thirty-eighth brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Eli Matson.

The twenty-second division—of the twenty-fourth and thirty-ninth brigades, and to be under the command of Major General William Wadsworth.

The twenty-third division—of the sixth and forty-sixth brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Worthy L. Churchill.

The twenty-fourth division—of the fifth and forty-seventh brigades, and to be under the command of Major General William Warren.

The twenty-fifth division—of the first and forty-third brigades, and to be under the command of Major General Samuel S. Haight.

The Commander-in-chief avails himself of this occasion to exhort the militia to attend to the injunctions of the law recently enacted for their government, and to render themselves expert in military service and tactics. And when called upon to unsheath the sword in vindication of the rights of their country, let it be said of them, that in their able and faithful discharge of the arduous and honorable functions of the soldier, they have performed the most sacred and imperative duties of the citizen.

By order of the Commander-in-chief,

SOL. VAN RENSSELAER,

Adjutant General.

The session of 1819 opened with the conflict raging between Governor Clinton on one side and Martin Van Buren, with the "Bucktails" on the other. Mr. Van Buren and his friends had by clever political strategy, as they thought, secured a majority of the Republican votes, before the legislature met, for William Thompson, of Seneca, for speaker. The friends of the governor, however, decided at the last moment to nominate Obadiah German, of Chenango. The Federalists had selected William A. Duer, of Albany. The first day of the session, January 5th, a ballot disclosed an undecided result. The house balloted four times without reaching a decision. On January 6th a ballot resulted without choice. A resolution was offered by General Erastus Root, of Delaware, in effect, that William Thompson be appointed speaker of the house. This was defeated as was a similar one in favor of Mr. Duer. Then a resolution that named General German was submitted and adopted by a vote of 67 to 48, a majority of the Federalist members voting with the followers of Governor Clinton.

The Council of Appointment was chosen February 3 and consisted of Stephen Barnum of Dutchess, William Ross of Orange, George Rosecrantz of Herkimer, and Stephen Bates of Ontario, a majority of whom were friendly to Governor Clinton.

On February 8th General Erastus Root introduced a resolution which provided for the call of a convention "with unlimited powers, to revise, alter or modify the constitution." The Federalists opposed and killed it. During the spring and autumn of 1819 many changes were made in public offices. Richard Riker was removed from his position as recorder of New York, and Peter Augustus Jay, a staunch Federalist, son of John Jay, was appointed in his place. Mr. Van Buren was removed from the office of Attorney General and Thomas J. Oakley, the Federalist leader in the Assembly, succeeded him.

The forty-third session of the legislature began January 4, 1820. John C. Spencer of Ontario, a Clinton Republican, was elected speaker of the house. The coalition of the followers of DeWitt Clinton and the Federalists continued, and in this manner the Council of appointment was selected, composed of the following: John D. Ditmis of Queens, John Lounsbery of Ulster, Levi Adams of Lewis, and Ephraim Hart of Oneida. Mr. Ditmis was a Federalist, the others Clintonian Republicans. Governor Clinton in his address to the legislature renewed his recommendations for a constitutional convention.

"The constitution of this state was formed nearly forty-three years ago. And considering the circumstances under which it was established, in the midst of war and commotion, and without the benefits of much experience, in representative government, it is not a little surprising that it is so free from imperfection. Attempts have been made at various times to call conventions to introduce alterations, which have only succeeded in a single instance; probably from an apprehension that an innovating spirit might predominate, and destroy, instead of consolidating, this temple of freedom and safety. Parties are the natural offspring of Republican government.

Wherever freedom exists, it will be manifested in differences of opinion with respect to the best mode of promoting the public welfare. And when these contentions spread over society, they form parties; and mingling sometimes with private views and local interests degenerate into faction, which seeks its gratification in violation of morality, and at the expense of the general good. And such is the proneness of human nature to cherish the spirit of contention, that we often see the continuance of parties after the cessation of the producing causes. While this state has made rapid and signal advances to prosperity, it has been more obnoxious to the excitement of party than any member of the Federal union. Even during the gloomy periods of the revolution, this spirit was exhibited in a variety of shapes; and since that time it has scarcely ever ceased to agitate society. After giving full weight to other assignable causes, we are forced to conclude, that there is a radical defect in the constitution of our government; that it either wants some essential check against the progress of party, or that it contains in its arrangements the elements of discord and excitement. The assembly, which is the most numerous branch of the legislature, and which is annually chosen, elects every year from the senate four persons, who together with the Governor constitute the Council of Appointment. The offices in the gift of this Council are remunerated by salaries or fees to the amount of a million of dollars annually. Combinations will be formed to obtain the control of this enormous patronage; and they will attempt to influence, in the first place, the elections of the people, by dictating, under the forms and discipline of party; 2dly, the selection of the appointing power; and, 3dly, the operations of that institution. And when no leading measures of the government have been impeached, and no important differences of opinion pretended, endeavors are not unusual to cherish the spirit of discord by conjuring up the shades of departed controversy, by appealing to the vindictive feelings of disappointment, or exciting the cravings of ambition and cupidity. With this principle of irritation in our constitution, the hydra of faction will be in constant operation, endeavoring to work its way to power, sometimes by open denunciation, at other times by secret intrigue, and always by artful approaches. The responsibility of public officers is essential to the due performance of their trust, and is demanded by the properties of delegated power and the best interests of the community. This Council, as constituted, is almost entirely destitute of this essential requisite. The political tranquillity of the state demands a different arrangement of the appointing power. And I have no hesitation in recommending a convention for this and such other purposes as may be imperatively required by the public welfare. And I do this under a full persuasion that the powers of the convention cannot transcend the objects committed to their cognizance by the concurrent act of the legislature and people: that the land-marks of security to liberty, property, religion and life, will be inviolably preserved, and more firmly established; and that the measures, which will be adopted, will have a benign influence in preserving the harmony of the community and elevating the reputation of the state."

On Tuesday, January 18, 1820, the assembly committee, of which Mr. John Van Fossen of Ontario was chairman, to whom was referred that part of the Governor's speech relating to the calling of a constitutional convention, reported and recommended "the calling of a convention, and with such further powers as this legislature may deem proper to recommend." After many filibustering tactics, the bill failed of passage.

January 18th, a caucus was held in Albany of Republican members of the legislature, who opposed the renomination of Governor

DeWitt Clinton. Out of the sixty-four members in attendance, fifty-two voted in favor of nominating Daniel D. Tompkins for Governor. General Benjamin Mooers, of Plattsburgh, was chosen as the candidate for Lieutenant Governor. Governor Clinton was, however, renominated at a meeting of the citizens of Albany, with Lieutenant Governor John Tayler in the second place on the ticket. The Federalists made no nomination; it was estimated, however, that the larger proportion of them supported Governor Clinton, although many of the most influential Federalists, called in the language of the day "the high-minded Federalists," openly repudiated the Governor and indorsed the nomination of Mr. Tompkins. The election was the closest in result the state had seen since the memorable contest in 1792 between Governor George Clinton and John Jay; DeWitt Clinton's majority over Judge Tompkins was only 1,457, out of 93,437 votes polled. The "Bucktails," who usurped the name of the Republican party, not only increased their majority in the senate but controlled the assembly.

The time was now ripe for amending the constitution. The population of the state had grown from 250,000 when the first constitution was adopted to 1,372,111 in 1820. Political methods and political thought had practically been revolutionized. The experimental stage had been safely passed. The introduction of steam had brought the people of the state nearer together. The frontier had been pushed out of the state. The wilderness with all its terrors and dangers was a thing of the past. Education was striding forward with gigantic impetus. Flourishing and thriving villages and towns were springing forth all over the commonwealth under the nourishing influence of progressive civilization in places hitherto regarded as inaccessible. Inland communication was the topic above all others that was disseminated by the public press, stump orators and the pulpit. The state was growing, developing, expanding, in population, wealth, resources. The Council of Appointment had at last become unpopular and odious. Its capabilities for prostituting the civil service had been established during the past two years when the patronage of the state had been controlled by the minority faction of the Republican party, coalescing with the remnants of the Federal party, which as a political party had practically ceased to exist.

The first outspoken demand for remodelling the constitution came from Tammany Hall. On August 25, 1820, a meeting of Republicans, or "Bucktails," was held in New York, where a resolution was adopted which declared for a convention with unlimited powers to amend the state constitution. The press took up the cry, and the demand for a change become general wherever a Republican newspaper was circulated.

The legislature was called to meet November 7th for the purpose of choosing presidential electors. Peter Sharpe, of New York, an anti-Clinton candidate, was elected speaker of the house. November 8th, a Council of Appointment hostile to Governor Clinton was selected, namely, Walter Bowne of New York, John T. More of Delaware, Roger Skinner of Washington, and David E. Evans of Genesee. This council, however, deferred active work until the following winter. The next day the presidential electors were chosen—favorable to President Monroe and Daniel D. Tompkins.

The spirit of hostility against the Governor manifested itself in an unexpected manner at this session of the legislature. In accordance with custom, the Governor delivered a speech to the legislature, which met with violent antagonism. The speech was referred to the customary committee, who reported back to the house a communication that was conspicuous for bitterness. The committee said, in their opinion, "an answer to the speech of His Excellency may be omitted without any disrespect to him," that "the constitution demands neither the one nor the other." The practice had prevailed in the general government until Mr. Jefferson became president of the United States. "He thought proper, for reasons nearly similar to those which have been already urged, to discontinue a custom which is in truth a mere remnant of royalty 'and more honored in the breach than in the observance.'" In conclusion, the committee recommended the adoption of the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the custom of delivering a speech by the executive to the legislature at the opening of their session and of returning an answer to the same is a remnant of royalty not recommended by any considerations of public utility, and ought to be abolished.

"Resolved, That it is expedient to omit the usual answer to a speech of His Excellency the Governor made to the legislature at the commencement of the present session."

The assembly then took up the question of a constitutional convention, the bill having been introduced by Mr. Ulshoeffer of New York. On the 16th inst. the bill was slightly amended and on the 18th inst. was sent to the senate, which returned it to the assembly on the 20th. The measure was thereupon submitted to the Council of Revision, who vetoed it, by the casting vote of the Governor, for the following reasons, Chancellor Kent having drafted the opinion:

1. Because the bill recommends to the citizens of this State to choose, by ballot, on the second Tuesday in February next delegates to meet in convention for the purpose of making such alterations in the Constitution of this State as they may deem proper, without having first taken the sense of the people whether such a convention for such a general and unlimited revisal and alteration of the Constitution be in their judgment necessary or expedient.

There can be no doubt of the great and fundamental truth, that all free governments are founded on the authority of the people, and that they have at all times an indefeasible right to alter and reform the same as to their wisdom shall seem meet. The Constitution is the will of the people expressed in their original charter, and intended for the permanent protection and happiness of them and their posterity, and it is perfectly consonant to the republican theory, and to the declared sense and practice of this country, that it cannot be altered or changed in any degree without the expression of the same original will. It is worthy, therefore, of great consideration, and may well be doubted whether it belongs to the ordinary legislature, chosen only to make laws in pursuance of the provisions of the existing constitution, to call a convention, in the first instance to revise, alter and perhaps remodel the whole fabric of the government, and before they have received a legitimate and full expression of the will of the people that such changes should be made. The difficulty of acceding to such a measure of reform, without the previous approbation of the constituents of the government, presses with peculiar force and with painful anxiety upon the Council of Revision, which was instituted for the express purpose of guarding the Constitution against the passage of laws "inconsistent with its spirit."

The Constitution of this State has been in operation upwards of forty years, and we have but one precedent on this subject, and that is the case of the convention of 1801. But it is to be observed that the convention of that year was called for two specific objects only, and with no other power or authority whatsoever. One of those objects was merely to determine the true construction of one of its articles and was not intended to alter or amend it, and the other was to reduce and limit the number of the senators and members of the assembly.

The last was the single alteration proposed, and perhaps even with respect to that point it would have been more advisable that the previous sense of the people should have been taken. But there is no analogy between this single and cautious case, and the measure recommended by the present bill, which is not confined to any specific object of alteration or revisal, but submits the whole constitutional charter, with all its powers and provisions, however venerable they may have become by time, and valuable by experience, to unlimited revisal. The Council have no evidence before them, nor does any legitimate and authentic evidence exist, that the people of this State think it either wise or expedient that the entire Constitution should be revised and probed, and perhaps disturbed to its foundation.

The Council, therefore, think it the most wise and safe course, and most accordant with the performance of the great trust committed to the representative powers under the Constitution, that the question of a general revision of it should be submitted to the people, in the first instance, to determine whether a convention ought to be convened.

The declared sense of the American people throughout the United States, on this very point, cannot but be received with great respect and reverence, and it appears to be the almost universal will, expressed in their constitutional charters, that conventions to alter the Constitution shall not be called, at the instance of the legislature, without the previous sanction of the people by whom those Constitutions were ordained.

The Constitution of Massachusetts was established in 1780, and contains the earliest provision on this subject. It provided that in the year 1795, the sense of the people should be taken on the necessity or expediency of revising the Constitution, and that if two-thirds of the votes of the people were in favor of such revision and amendment, the legislature should provide for calling a convention. The convention now sitting in that state was called in consequence of a previous submission of such a question to the people.

The Constitution of South Carolina was ordained in 1790, and in that it is declared that no convention should be called, unless by the concurrence of two-thirds of both branches of the legislature; and the Constitution of Georgia, established in 1798, contains the same provision; thus showing that though the people be not previously consulted on the question, yet a more than ordinary caution and check upon such a measure was indispensable. The Constitution of Delaware, of 1792, declares very emphatically that no convention shall be called but by the authority of the people, and that their sense shall be taken by a vote for or against a convention, and that if a majority of all the citizens shall have voted for a convention, the legislature shall make provision for calling one. The same constitutional provision, that no convention shall be called to alter or amend the Constitution until the sense of the people, by vote, shall have been previously taken, whether in their opinion there was a necessity or expediency for a revision of the Constitution, has been successfully adopted by the Constitution of New Hampshire in 1792; by the Constitution of Tennessee in 1796; by the Constitution of Kentucky in 1799; by the Constitution of Louisiana in 1812; by the Constitution of Indiana in 1816; by the Constitution of Mississippi in 1817; and by the Constitution of Illinois in 1818.

It would, as the Council apprehend, be impossible to produce higher and more respectable authority in favor of such a provision, and of its value and safety.

2. Because the bill contemplates an amended Constitution to be submitted to the people, to be adopted or rejected in toto, without prescribing any mode by which a discrimination may be made between such provisions as shall be deemed salutary, and such as shall be disapproved by the judgment of the people. If the people are competent to pass upon the entire amendments, of which there can be no doubt, they are equally competent to adopt such of them as they approve and to reject such as they disapprove; and this undoubted right of the people is the more important if the convention is to be called in the first instance, without a previous consultation of the pure and original source of all legitimate authority. And it is worthy of consideration, and gives additional force to the expediency and fitness of a previous reference to the people, that time will be thereby given for more mature deliberation upon questions arising upon the constitution, which are always momentous in their nature, and calculated to affect not the present generation alone, but their distant posterity, and when the legislature may probably have it in their power to avail themselves of a more just and accurate apportionment of the representation in the convention, among the several counties of this state.

The above objections having been communicated the same day to the house, were referred to a select committee of the assembly, to "consider and report thereon at the next meeting of the legislature."

The regular session of the legislature began January 9, 1821. Mr. Ulshoeffer, from the select committee, to whom was referred the objections of the Council of Revision to the constitutional convention bill, submitted a report which closed in these words:

"In every view, then, which your committee can take of this subject they consider the objections of the Council as themselves inconsistent with the spirit of the constitution, and in no respect well founded; and they are also of the opinion that the said bill entitled 'An act recommending a convention of the people of this state,' ought, notwithstanding the objections of the Council of Revision, to be passed into a law."

The report with the bill was laid upon the table. Mr. John C. Spencer gave notice that he would on some future day ask leave to introduce a bill to be entitled "An act to obtain the authority of the people of this state for the meeting of a convention to revise the constitution and to provide for the election of delegates to such convention when authorized to be held."

The following day, January 10th, Mr. Spencer introduced the bill, which on the following Monday, having been read the second time, was referred to a committee, consisting of Mr. Michael Ulshoeffer of New York, Mr. John C. Spencer of Ontario, Mr. William Thompson of Seneca, Mr. Simeon Ford of Herkimer, and Mr. Erastus Root of Delaware. The bill having passed the assembly, met with but slight opposition in the senate, and having been engrossed, was sent on March 7th to the Council of Revision, which approved it.

Substantially, the bill provided that at the annual election to be held on the last Tuesday in April, the citizens of the state should vote upon the question of "convention" or "no convention," the right of suffrage being restricted to all male citizens of the state of the age of twenty-one years or upwards possessing a freehold "or who shall have been actually rated and paid taxes to the state or who shall have been actually enrolled in the militia of the state or in a legal volunteer or uniform corps and shall have served therein either as an officer or private or who shall have been or now are by law exempt from taxation or militia duty or who shall have been assessed to work on public roads and highways and shall have worked thereon or shall have paid a commutation therefor according to law."

The election was limited to three days. It was further provided that if a majority of the ballots indicated "no convention" all further proceedings under the act in relation to the calling of a convention should cease, but if a majority of the ballots or votes favored a "convention" the canvassers should certify and declare that a convention would be called accordingly. A copy of the certificate should be then transmitted to the secretary of state, to the sheriffs of the respective counties, and it was "recommended to the citizens of this state on the third Tuesday of June next, to elect by ballot delegates to meet in convention, for the purpose of considering the constitution of this state, and making such alterations in the same as they may deem proper and to provide the manner of making future amendments thereto."

The number of delegates was limited to the number of members of assembly, and were to be chosen under the same qualifications. It was further provided that the delegates "shall meet in convention at the Capitol in the city of Albany on the last Tuesday of August next, from whence they may, if they think proper, adjourn to any other place."

The proceedings and the determination and propositions of the convention were to be entered in the office of the secretary of state. It was to be the "duty of the said convention to submit their proposed amendments to the decision of the citizens of this state, entitled to vote under 'the Enabling act' together or in distinct propositions as shall to them seem expedient."

The Council of Appointment began active operations on January 12th. They signalized their advent to power by unrelenting slaughter of Governor Clinton's friends in office. Archibald McIntyre, who had held the office of comptroller from 1806 to 1821, was removed for no other reason than for his friendship for Governor Clinton; Thomas J. Oakley, attorney general, was sacrificed for the same reason and incidentally because of his Federalist proclivities. John Savage of Washington county succeeded Mr. McIntyre, and Samuel A. Talcott of Utica, Mr. Oakley. Eleven writs of supersedeas were ordered to be issued to as many Clinton sheriffs—the names of "Buck tails" being substituted. The Council carried their policy of guillotining official heads equally among military, judicial and civil departments. The removal of General Solomon Van Rensselaer, the adjutant general, and the appointment of William L. Marcy, produced a great wave of excitement and indignation among the survivors of the War of 1812. General Anthony Lamb of New York, the commissary general, made way for Alexander M. Muir of New York; Gilead Sperry, a colonel of Clinton county cavalry, was deprived of his command without cause. Cadwalader D. Colden gave way to Stephen Allen as mayor of New York, and Richard Riker succeeded Peter Augustus Jay as recorder.

Gideon Hawley, the father of the common school system of the state, was removed from his position as superintendent of schools without any justification, and supplanted by Welcome Esleeck of Albany. The legislature promptly repudiated this appointment by passing a bill, which was introduced by General Erastus Root of Delaware, and which abolished the office of superintendent of schools and transferred its duties to the secretary of state.

The last legislature under the first constitution of the state assembled at Albany January 1, 1822. The old Republican party had gradually and naturally assumed the name of the Democratic party, which had been more or less used by many of its believers for a decade. Samuel B. Romaine of New York, the candidate of that party, was chosen speaker. The following committee was appointed on the part of the assembly to answer the Governor's speech: Mr. Michael Ulshoeffer of New York, Mr. Silvester Gardner of Onondaga, Mr. Philip Brasher of New York, Mr. Jacob I. Hasbrouck of Ulster, and Mr. John Blakeley of Otsego. On the 7th inst. Mr. Ulshoeffer, from the committee, submitted the following report:

"That it seems to have been the practice of the colonial government, drawn from the usage of the king and parliament of Great Britain, for the governor to meet the assembly in person, and to deliver a speech, at the opening of each session; and for the house to return an answer thereto. The members of assembly marched in procession, to the governor's quarters, and attended at the delivery of the answer which was read by the speaker. This ceremony appears to have been adopted by the governors of our state, and by both houses of the legislature since the revolution, and has continued to be followed until within the two last sessions.

"In the speech of Governor Clinton, of 1819, he declares to the legislature that answers are not demanded by the constitution, nor by expediency, and beside prolonging the session and frequently interrupting its harmony they exhibit formality and pageantry, not altogether well adapted to the simplicity of our republican institutions.

"Concurring with these suggestions, the legislature of that year omitted the usual answer to the speech. But at the succeeding session it appears that his Excellency the Governor delivered a speech to both houses, thereby exhibiting a formality and pageantry on his part, which he wished to be dispensed with on their part. The assembly, therefore, appointed a committee to consider upon the propriety of answering the speech; from whose report it appears that there is no constitutional or other reason for the delivery of a speech, in person, by the governor; and that 'the example,' of such long standing and general adoption, afforded by 'the author of the declaration of independence,' of sending a message, instead of delivering a speech, ought to be considered worthy of imitation, as emanating from so venerable a patriot, and so distinguished a republican.

"It also appears that on the 16th November, 1820, in order to obviate an intimation of the governor 'that custom has prescribed a personal instead of a written communication, perhaps as being most respectful to the representatives of the people,' the house of assembly did resolve, 'that the custom of delivering a speech by the executive to the legislature at the opening of the session, and of returning an answer to the same is a remnant of royalty not recommended by any considerations of public utility and ought to be abolished.'

"Every reason which may have existed in the mind of the governor for personally delivering a speech was thus removed; and it was most undoubtedly expected that 'in cherishing a spirit of forbearance and in cultivating that respect which we owe to each other and ourselves,' his excellency, at the opening of the present session, would have complied with the wishes of the representatives of the people, followed the precedent of the illustrious Jefferson, and avoided that pageantry and formality so inconsistent with the simplicity of our republican institutions.

"But these just expectations have not been realized, and his excellency has again followed the royal custom of delivering a speech to both houses; in which speech the legislature is specially cautioned to be forbearing, conciliatory and respectful. Yet there would seem to be no spirit of reciprocity in this caution; for the declared wishes of the assembly, that the pageantry and formality of a speech should be discontinued, are not even noticed when they are disregarded by his excellency.

"Under such circumstances perhaps the assembly is called upon to exercise their equally valid right of personal communication with the executive and of answering his speech. And your committee would have recommended that course was it not for the circumstance mentioned by his excellency, that an amended constitution is before the public, which 'varying essentially, in many of its provisions, from the present frame of government,' will hereafter obviate so many difficulties.

"Nor are there any very important considerations for answering the speech, even if the assembly was disposed to continue that practice until another election. The duty of the legislature to consider the propositions of the executive will be faithfully performed; and its time will be more usefully employed in attending to the public business than following, on this last occasion, an example of mere pageantry and formality.

"If, however, your committee believed that there was a want of information on the part of the good people of this state, respecting the new constitution, which is alluded to by his excellency; or if they believed that the honest advice of this legislature would in any degree confirm the favorable sentiments of the people, concerning that instrument, they would cheerfully assume the responsibility of recommending a legislative expression on the subject, in the form of an answer to his excellency's speech. And your committee have hesitated considerably on that part of the speech relating to the proceedings of the convention, because whatever may be its influence, it is liable to misconstruction and cannot be of any advantage in respect to the pending election.

"The question on the adoption of the new constitution is of vital importance, and the people of this state have a right to claim from their representatives of every character, who speak on the subject, friendly advice and a frank and honest avowal of opinion.

"Mere advice and opinions, honestly given and entertained, are at all times desirable. And it is to be regretted that the executive did not omit entirely any notice of the proceedings of the convention; or noticing them, that he did not express his opinions frankly and candidly upon the subject. For it is very evident that doubts are entertained of the character of his excellency's remarks on the constitution, and that those remarks may be considered by some as favorable, and by others as unfavorable to its adoption.

"Sentiments promulgated in our individual capacities do not reach so far and wide as responsible opinions in a representative character; and statesmen may too frequently avoid expressing opinions on important political questions, either in their individual or public capacities. Indeed, your committee do not perceive any good reason in reference to the present subject why an honest opinion, entertained in one character, might not, with perfect propriety and 'with frankness and candor,' be avowed in another. Nor can they avoid the strong conviction that notwithstanding the existence of different sentiments as to the various amendments of our state constitution, the people, upon the whole, approve of the proceedings of the convention; and that the acceptance of the new constitution is a point intimately connected with the best interests, and the permanent prosperity and happiness of our state. Considering, however, that the public mind is fully informed on this subject, and believing that the paragraphs before alluded to in his excellency the governor's speech do not require any answer, your committee submit, for the consideration of the house, the following resolution:

"Resolved, That this house approves of the declaration of the late assembly, that the custom of delivering a speech by the executive to the legislature at the opening of the session, and of returning an answer to the same is a remnant of royalty not recommended by any considerations of public utility, and ought to be abolished."

The last Council of Appointment was appointed January 10th and consisted of John Townsend of Westchester, Charles E. Dudley of Albany, Benjamin Mooers of Clinton, and Perry G. Childs of Madison. The duties of this Council were nominal, for by the result of the election held January 15th, 16th and 17th, the new constitution was adopted by the people of the state, seventy-five thousand four hundred and twenty-two votes were cast in ratification and forty-one thousand four hundred and ninety-seven in opposition.
